NAME LINDBERGH BABY

(Copyright, 1932, I. N. S.)
Englewood, N. J., Oct. 25.—The Lindbergh baby has been named at last! His name is John Morrow Lindbergh. After more than two months of indecision, Colonel and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh decided on the plain name John some time during this week, it was learned today by I. N. S.

They have fought shy of calling the second child, born six months after the murder of their first born, by any name suggestive of that of the dead child. They wanted to call him something reminiscent of the Morrow family, however. The typical American name was chosen because it was simple, masculine sounding and the sort of name the boy can make mean whatever he wishes, a close friend said. He could be John, Jack, Johnny, or, as is likely, Lindy, like his father. The middle name, Mrs. Lindbergh's former name, was given out of respect for the late Senator Morrow, her father.

The young couple felt they could not call the child Dwight Morrow Lindbergh because the name Dwight belongs already to the Morrow son, Young Morrow is still a student at Amherst College and has no immediate plans of being married, so far as is known.

ARREST THREE SUSPECTS

Camden, N. J., Oct. 25.—Three suspects were taken into custody today by Trenton and New Jersey state police in connection with the killing of Charles Peifer, 39, of Camden, who was found shot to death in the cab of a liquor laden truck near Bordentown, N. J. The body was found by Harry Ervin, 26, Trenton, N. J., an employee of an auto wrecking concern who had been summoned to the scene by a mysterious telephone call. At about the same time a bullet-riddled machine was found at Oaklyn, N. J. Police are trying to learn if there is any connection between the killing of the man and the finding of the machine which was reported to have been stolen.

Ervin took the body of Peifer to a physician in Bordentown. Ervin's helper, Jack Lasko, Trenton, remained behind with the trucks. He was abducted with the two trucks by two strangers and near Yardley the trucks were held up by state police and Lasko freed. Police arrested the two men with Lasko who identified themselves as Michael Cannato, 24, and Michael Tramantani, 24, both of Trenton. Trenton police meanwhile had seized Jack Arblitt, 25.

The suspects were taken to the Burlington County jail where they are to be questioned by Ellis Parker, chief of detectives.

SOME UNUSUAL NAMES GIVEN PENNA. CHILDREN

Interesting Phase of Work of Statistics Bureau is The Gathering of Names

ONE IS "DEPRESSION"

HARRISBURG, Oct. 25.—An interesting phase of the work of gathering vital statistics in Pennsylvania, which task is performed in every community of the Commonwealth by a staff of employees especially designated for that purpose, and reporting to Dr. Emlyn Jones, chief of the Bureau of Vital Statistics, State Department of Health, is the appearance of quaint and unusual names that have been given to children, and entered on the report to Harrisburg.

Mr. Elmer W. Ehler, assistant chief of the bureau, who is in direct charge of the work, has selected a few of the more curious of recent names which he has found entered upon report blanks, and among them we find the following, which some boy or girl will have to carry through life.

Taking note of the "Times" a Delaware county couple have named their baby girl "Viola Depression Palestine Davis." One would think that the "depression" is a thing that all would want to forget, but one family is going to keep it in memory, and the year of this girl's birth will always be associated with the year of "depression."

Taking the prize for length, is this baby's name, reported from Erie county: "Anthonie George John Emile Vand der Star Den Hartogh." Just think of starting a boy off in life staggering under the weight of such a cognomen! Of course, when he grows up, he can just be "George Hartogh," but since all these names have been legally given him, he may have to go to law to be relieved of the burden.

Here's one from Lycoming county: "Montourville Tisaquam Yellist!" From the Indian, evidently! And the girl born on Armistice Day in Wyoming county who will always carry the name of "Armistice M. Williams." While a remembrance of the Liberty Bond days is contained in the one from Cambria county—"United States Liberty Barrett." There's patriotism in that name—surely.

Mrs. Adeline Kirk, 68, Dies at South Langhorne

SOUTH LANGHORNE, Oct. 25.—Mrs. Adeline Kirk, widow of Jesse Kirk, aged 68, died at the home of her sister, Mrs. Watson, Oakhurst, last night, after an illness of a few months.

The deceased is survived by four sisters, Mrs. Watson, and Mrs. Johnson, of Oakhurst; Mrs. Olmrod, and Mrs. Smith, Philadelphia. The late Mrs. Kirk was formerly a resident of Helming's Corner, Middletown Township.

The funeral service will be conducted from the residence of Mrs. Watson, here, Thursday, at two o'clock. Burial will be made in Hillside Cemetery, Jenkintown.

WHY WHITE LINES?

By the Stroller

According to a report from Harrisburg a new reason for the presence of the white center line on the highways was given the Highway Patrol recently.

A patrolman was examining an applicant for a driver's license. Among other questions relative to the Vehicle Code and safety, the officer asked the meaning of the white line.

"For bicycle riders to ride on," was the reply.

The license was refused.

PENN AND HIS HOME LIFE AT PENNSBURY

Address by Dr. B. F. Fackenthal, Jr., Riegelsville, Pennsylvania, before The Welcome Society of Pennsylvania, at Pennsbury, Bucks County, Pa., October 23, 1932.

(Second Installment)

William Penn Comes to Pennsylvania by Ship "Welcome"

William Penn sailed from Deal, England, for America by ship "Welcome" September 1, 1682, and entered the Capes of the Delaware October 24 of that year, arriving before New Castle on the 27th and first set foot on American soil on the 28th, and on the following day, October 29th arrived at Upland, later changed to Clarkson, then to Chester. With a new world before him to begin his "Holy Experiment."

Among the early acts of Markham and the Commissioners was the selection of a site for a great city for which Pennsbury Manor was seriously considered, but the location at the junction of the Delaware and Schuylkill was finally selected, resulting in the founding of Philadelphia, which during the latter part of 1682, William Penn with the assistance of his surveyor, Thomas Holme laid out, the site having been purchased from the Swedes in exchange for a larger tract located elsewhere. In 1684 Philadelphia contained 357 houses with 2,500 people, in 1685 it contained 600 houses.

The second purchase of land from the Indians was made by William Penn in person, deed dated June 23, 1683, for land lying between the Neshaminy and Peapack, partly in Montgomery County. The Bucks County part embraces the townships of Bensalem, Southampton, Northampton, Warminster and Warrington.

The third tract beginning at Wrightstown was for lands taken by the Walking Purchase of 1737, for which there is no time at my disposal to dwell upon today, but I beg leave to refer you to my address at the unveiling of the Walking Purchase monument erected in Springfield Township by the State Historical Commission contained in Volume VI, of the Bucks County Historical Society publications.

Pennsbury Manor
William Markham having been instructed by William Penn to locate a site for his country home, selected this tract in Falls Township, on part of which we are assembled today, and since known as "Pennsbury Manor." At that time it contained 8,331 acres or 57 per cent of the area of Falls Township, which contains 14,838 acres. It was bought from an Indian King, and was formerly an Indian Royalty called "Sapassin." It had a frontage of 5 1/2 miles on the Delaware. Scott's Creek, later called Welcome Creek, now a shallow stream, empties into the Delaware about one mile south of the Manor House, but in William Penn's time is said to have been a strong stream with a depth of five feet, its course was immediately back of the Mansion House, over which Penn directed that bridges should be built.

William Penn was delighted with the site selected by Markham. The house and other buildings were put under construction at the time of Penn's first visit, but there is no available evidence to show that he lived there in its unfinished condition. He was obliged to return to England, and sailed away by ship "Endeavor" June 12, 1684, having been in America but two years and eight months. He had the building of this house very much in mind and gave detailed instructions from England in regard to both the building and furnishing, and the laying out of the grounds. Penn brought the greater part of the furniture with him on his second visit. In later years he wrote from England saying the house had cost him £7,000.

The Children of William Penn

By his first wife, Gulielma Maria Springett, William Penn had seven children. His first born, named for her mother, lived but a few months; the next two, William and Mary were twins, both dying in infancy; the fourth, Springett, died at the age of 21 unmarried; Letitia the fifth, born March 6, 1678, married William Aubrey, and died without issue April 6, 1746; William, Jr., the sixth born March 14, 1680, married Mary Jones, and from him is derived one of the two existing lines of the Penn family; the seventh, Gulielma Maria, the second of that name, born November 17, 1685, died in infancy. William Penn's wife Gulielma Maria, nee Springett, passed away February 23, 1693.

William Penn Marries Hannah Callowhill

Two years after the death of his first wife, William Penn married for his second wife, Hannah, daughter of Thomas and Hannah Callowhill; she was a member of the Society of Friends. By this union he had seven children: (1) John, born in Philadelphia January 29, 1700; (2) Thomas, born March 9, 1702, who at the age of 50 years married Lady Juliana Fermor who was but 21; (3) Hannah Margaret, born July 30, 1703, died in 1707; (4) Margaret, born November 7, 1704, married Thomas Freame, died in 1704; (5) Richard, born January 17, 1705, married Hannah Lardner; (6) Dennis, born February 26, 1706, died unmarried in 1722, aged 16 years; (7) Hannah, born September 5, 1708, died January 24, 1709.

It is therefore seen that William Penn was the father of fourteen children, seven by each marriage. Of those by his first wife four died in infancy, and three lived to maturity, and one of these three, Springett, died at the age of 21 unmarried, and Letitia married and died without issue, leaving William, Jr., the only one as a progenitor of a family.

Of the seven children by his second wife, two, Hannah Margaret and Hannah died in infancy and Dennis died at the age of 16, leaving four, John, Thomas, Margaret and Richard living to maturity. I shall refer to these later.

William Penn's Second Visit To America and His Home Life at Pennsbury

There was a lapse of 17 years from the time of William Penn's return to England until he set out for his second voyage. During that time he was accused of various offenses against the Crown, including that of treason. He was arrested a number of times but always secured acquittal. During his absence from America his colony had been greatly disturbed by civil and religious quarrels, and in October, 1692, the King and Queen deprived him of

NEWTOWN FARMER ENDS LIFE BY HANGING

Son Finds Body Suspended From Closet In Room

ILL FOR TWO YEARS

NEWTOWN, Oct. 25.—Kazmier Rutcki, 63-year-old farmer, of the Middle Holland Road, near here, hanged himself last night following an illness of two years.

Rutcki's son, William, told authorities that he took his father's supper to his room and talked with him a few moments and then left him about 6.30. At 8.45 he went upstairs again and found the door to the room locked. His father did not reply when he called to him, so he went down and got a ladder and entered the room through the window. Rutcki was suspended from the door of a closet by a piece of binding from a sheet.

Constable Elmer Rodgers investigated and reported the suicide to John J. Sweeney, coroner of Bucks County.

Rutcki apparently tied the bit of sheet to the closet door and jumped off a small stool that was found overturned at his feet.

He is survived by his widow and four sons, William, Leon, Matthew and Benedict. The latter two work on the Starkey farm at Morrisville.

HAVE SOCIAL

ROAD SUPERVISOR SUES FOR DAMAGES TO HIS REPUTATION

Wm. W. Parrish Asks $25,000
from Four Men in Nockamixon Township

SLANDERED AT MEETING

Alleged Statements Made Said
To Have Ruined His Credit

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 25.—Claiming that his good name, fame, credit and reputation has been brought in disgrace and disrepute amongst his neighbors, William Warren Parrish, road supervisor of Nockamixon Township, and deposed road master of that district, is asking $25,000 damages from William Seitz, Harrow; Harvey Deemer, Kintnersville, both supervisors of the township; H. Webster Shive, tax collector, and Clarence W. Weberbach, Ferndale, township auditor.

The case was called for trial yesterday in the Court of Common Pleas of Bucks county before Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Seitz is chairman of the board and Parrish is secretary.

Parrish testified that at a meeting of tax-payers in Ferndale Hall on April 28, 1931, the defendants, subjected him to prosecution and punishment for larceny, embezzlement and violations of the liquor law.

The plaintiff stated that among the statements made at that meeting for the purpose of getting rid of him as a public official were the following:

"Parrish is drunk most of the time on the job as roadmaster and frequently has, while working, large quantities of intoxicating liquor in his possession and under his control which he uses to excess himself and furnishes to men working under him."

"Parrish charged upon his slips or records time, and received pay therefor, for which he did not work."

On the occasion of another public meeting on May 6, 1931, Parrish charges that the defendants in the presence of citizens of Nockamixon township, charged him with wilful and negligent mismanagement of the duties devolved upon him as roadmaster and of not being present on many occasions while work was being performed on the road to supervise work being done by men employed by him.

Parrish also charges that the defendants conspired to have him removed as roadmaster.

THE JOB'S THE THING

Next to health, the most important thing in the world is EMPLOYMENT.

Today the 35,000,000 gainfully employed are vitally interested in the SECURITY of their jobs. The 10,000,000 not employed are vitally interested in GETTING JOBS.

Both ask, and rightly: What does the election mean in terms of jobs? How is it going to affect me?

The answer is not difficult.

The re-election of President Hoover means that industry and business, now on the upgrade, will continue to speed up.

It means that the machinery he has set up, will continue to function with increasing efficiency.

It means SECURITY IN JOBS for the 35,000,000 who have them.

It means JOBS for those now unemployed.

It means confidence.

If, however, by any ACCIDENT, the President should be defeated, business and industry will pause to see what the new administration will do.

BANKERS' WARNING

Excessive taxation and excessive public borrowing are denounced by the American Bankers' Association as a menace to agriculture, industry, trade and transportation, in resolutions echoing a great cry for economy in public expenditure voiced in every quarter of our national life.

But whereas the plea of the taxpayers for the easing of their crushing burden often goes unheard and unheeded no branch of government will turn a deaf ear to the warning of the bankers, who have the final word in public financing.

Bankers throughout the land are closely watching public finance and the price of public securities, and the ease or difficulty of flotation varies significantly with the evidence of prudent financing or the contrary. And one by one they have firmly told states, counties and municipalities that they have no more money for them.

That saturnalia of public borrowing and extravagance which preceded the depression sprang from the same blissful ignorance of the perishable nature of prosperity as was shown in investing, business, spending and installment buying. It never occurred to government that property values would not go up forever and that there might come a time when public revenues would fall below the expenditures. Wholly lacking was that foresight which would have told the nation that the cost of servicing public indebtedness would some day drain public treasuries, halt public improvements, burden the taxpayers and hinder the necessary functions of government.

That campaign stuff about Roosevelt being a Santa Claus won't be convincing until they put whiskers on him.

Men generally do things in a bigger way than women, says a psychologist. Like jumping off bigger buildings.

Success has gone to the head of England's new heavyweight champ. Already he boasts he can fight anything on two legs, instead of this back.

He Fights Best Who's Lost His Shirt!

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER 43.

HE laid his head in her lap and groaned. "You don't know what you're saying. He was my friend. The best friend I ever had, Crystal."

"Yes, he sounds like a friend, I must say. Stealing from you! Twenty thousand cash, and a lot of bonds, or whatever it was—"

"You don't understand, Crystal. I—I never would have given him up. I didn't mean to. Greely—Greely forced me. If I had not thrown myself on Greely's mercy the whole thing would have gone to smash. . . . He took a dirty advantage, Crystal. . . . the hound! He . . . he had some facts. . . . I had to give Allan up, or . . . take the blame myself. . . . one or the other. He forced me. . . . damn him!"

His shoulders were shaking. Queer choking noises. . . . was the silly thing crying? Crystal's hand patted the bowed head in her lap, but her nose wrinkled in disgust. A man . . . carrying on like that? A little wrinkle of concentration gathered between her straight, pencilled brows. Had she been wasting her time?

"You're all worn out," she crooned. "A trip to Europe, like you were talking about the other night."

"Great Heavens, Crystal, I can't go now!"

"You mean . . . that you can't afford it now, dear?"

He never knew what hung on his answer. He just said quickly, from the depths of his despair, "Oh, it isn't the money. Six months from now I'll have forgotten that loss. What's twenty thousand? It just came at a bad time, that's all. But I can't go now—with him gone. I'll have to stick to the job. . . . Oh, Crystal. . . . if I didn't have you to talk to, I'd go mad!"

"You'll always have me, dear," she murmured, but she was nervous. She thought she heard foot-steps outside the door.

Old Mr. Greely was sitting up in his great walnut bed, with the pillows tucked around him. Wintry sunshine trickled through the red sun curtains at the long windows, made ruby spots on the dark red carpet. A beam of light fell on his face, thinner and more hawk-like than ever, and Daphne rose from her chair beside the bed, and drew the curtain.

"Is that better?" she asked. He nodded, watching her silently. His bright old eyes seemed a little more sunken, a little more remote under the thatch of bushy gray eyebrows, but he was little changed. His long siege of illness had left no mark upon him.

The door opened, and plump little Mrs. Colby came tiptoeing in, with his medicine in a glass. She was wearing the inevitable gray silk, and a starched white apron, that ended in a bow, and long streamers behind her back.

"Mercy! It's cold in here. Are you sure you don't want a fire? The furnace is so weak. . . . drink your medicine, John. . . . all of it. . . . I declare I wish we'd kept the nurse. I don't see why you didn't like her—"

"But you weren't hiring her to hear her talk. You must try not to be unreasonable, John. I pray every day, every hour, for patience. You never hear me raise my voice and shout, and I'm sure I have much to put up with. People tracking up and down stairs all in the corner."

Daphne looked furtively at her feet. . . . had she forgotten to wipe them on the mat?

"And my whole house turned into an office, with messenger boys and the telephone, and Henry telling me to my face he couldn't do the silver, he was too busy with the door."

"Office! Hell of an office, this is. I was dictating to Daphne. . . . where did we leave off, Daphne?"

Mrs. Colby seemed to observe Daphne for the first time. "How do you do, Miss Heinz?"

"Haines, sister, Haines!"

"Miss Haines, of course. Exactly what I said. . . . what was I saying? Oh, yes, you don't look well, my dear. Was there ever tuberculosis in your family? No? Well, it has to start somewhere. If I were you. . . . a good dose of cod liver oil every day. . . . nothing more building. . . . Of course it was a great shock, having your sweetheart abscond with the money, that way. A very great shock. I had a friend, when I was a girl. . . . that bank teller, John? Was his name Werneke? Something like that. . . . as I was saying."

"But it wasn't my sweetheart! I hardly knew Allan Winters!" Daphne cried, and then blushed miserably, remembering the kiss on the stairs.

"You hardly knew him?" Mrs. Colby echoed. Her round, pale eyes almost popped out of her head. "Well!" she said. "Well!" and stuck there.

The old man chuckled. "Daphne was always more interested in young McKevitt," he said dryly. "Allan was just a handy man, used to fill in when Ralph had to work nights, eh, Daphne?" And when she didn't answer he went on, half to himself, "Yes, they were all more interested in McKevitt. . . . Allan was—my candidate."

"He turned out very well, I must say," Mrs. Colby returned with a sniff.

The old man was silent.

"I never cared for Allan, myself," Mrs. Colby went on. "Not that he wasn't very pleasant spoken and well-mannered. But he was his father's son, John. You remember what I said when I heard the news—"

"Yes, I remember very well. You said 'I told you so!'"

"Certainly not. I certainly never predicted anything of the kind. I merely said, 'I'm not surprised,' and I am not. Cora Winters was always a very wishy-washy girl, and that husband. . . . well, it's no wonder the son turned out. . . . I thought when Cora married that Jim Winters there would be trouble. I remarked it at the time. I can see him yet, great big common gambler, that's all he was. . . . And blowing his brains out with an army revolver!"

"A gentleman would at least have taken poison quietly, or drowned himself. Well! I don't know that there's much anyone could expect of the boy, brought up around stables, and grooms and such—"

"Allan's father was a book-maker. Quite a notorious one," the old man told Daphne. "A great character in the old racing days at Emeryville. He had the fanciest vests and the biggest diamond stickpins on the track. He made a pile of money, not quite honestly, and lost it in the laudable attempt to make more in the same way. It was quite a scandal, the papers were full of it. As Sister Anne says, his suicide was neither refined nor delicate. . . ."

"Not one saving grace, John. He never came near Cora and the boy. If ever there was a neglected, heartbroken wife—"

"Yes, he had one grace, Anne. He loved the horses."

Mrs. Colby rose, rustling her skirts. "Since you choose to make fun of me, I will leave you, John!"

"I wasn't making fun of you. I was quite serious. With all his faults—he was a horseman, Anne. And dogs liked him."

Allan, too. Like father, like son. Well, as I said, I'm not surprised. Allan did just as one would expect. Made crooked investments, tried to get rich in a hurry, got caught—and ran away!"

"No, we shouldn't have expected anything different," the old man mused. "He didn't get much of a start. . . . you're right, Anne. Hit him again, he has no friends!"

Mrs. Colby made for the door. "If you are going to be vulgar I shall leave you. And I will say, John, that if you have no more respect for your sister than to come out with those common expressions, you might at least spare your secretary, who isn't so used to your vulgarity!"

When her indignant footsteps had ceased, he turned twinkling eyes on Daphne. "Mind my common ways?"

Daphne shook her head, and reached for her pencil and notebook again. "You were going to write Appleton on the Burns case—"

He leaned back on the pillows, suddenly tired. "Let it go for the present. Tomorrow will be another day. Getting old, Daphne, getting old. . . ."

And just as she was leaving, moving very quietly, so as not to disturb him, he opened his eyes and looked at her.

"You don't look any too well, yourself girl."

"Oh—I'm all right," she said, embarrassed.

"You're worrying about all this—this bad business, Daphne?"

She shook her head. "No. . . . it isn't for me to worry about McKevitt. I can keep busy worrying about Greely, Sanderson and McKevitt, can't I? That's what I'm paid for, isn't it?"

"Greely, Sanderson and McKevitt now control Ralph Iverson McKevitt," he reminded her, "so it's all the same. You can worry about him if you want to, though I'm thinking there'll be less of it necessary from now on. We'll make a business man out of young McKevitt yet."

"If all this worry over Allan doesn't kill him off first!" she cried and was surprised at the bitterness in her own voice.

They Shall Not Pass

CHEAPNESS makes only one-time customers. Quality makes lifetime friends. The reliable merchant is more concerned with goods that will truly serve than with goods that will merely sell.

You won't have to buy so often if you buy Quality oftener. When you pay far less than Quality you've bought something short of Value; you've gained something short of Economy.

Buy good goods. If it isn't good, it isn't a bargain. The merchant that fosters only Quality merchandise does so because he considers it good business to do so. He is guarding his good reputation because he has earned one to protect. He is guarding the good-will of his customers because he has built up that good-will by safeguarding their interests, satisfaction, economy.

Quality is not costly today. Prices are low. Cheap goods are costly because their prices are too low to include substantial service and value.

LEGION BOWLERS LEADING RACE NOW

The American Legion team is undisputed leader in the bowling league race this week, with Rohm & Haas a close second. The race for the next four places will be decided this week, with No. 1 having the advantage of holding their, having one point advantage, but the Odd Fellows, who have showed surprising improvement, may turn the tables on them, and by virtue of winning the four points, go ahead of No. 1 and considerably improve their position.

The Bristol Whites gave Tacony a beating by taking two games and total pins and now these teams are tied for the Suburban White League.

Bristol took over Trenton in a special inter-club duck pin match, 1612 to 1338. Brooks was high with 355 for three games.

PENN A. C. ELEVEN HOLDS THIRD WARDERS

A fighting Penn A. C. eleven in the shadows of its own goal posts held the strong Third Ward A. C. to a 7-6 score Saturday afternoon. The game was played on Sullivan's field. The winners outweighed the losers almost twenty pounds to a man.

The Pennacs were first to score. In the first canto, D. DiBlassio caught a pass hurled by T. DiBlassio and raced to the three yard line before he was brought to the earth. D. DiBlassio then plunged over the final chalk mark for six points. The try for the extra point was unsuccessful.

No further scoring was made again until the Warders pushed across their touchdown in the third period. The Pikers carried the ball up the field and from the two yard line Captain Lake went off tackle to score. The winning point was made on a line play.

Indelicato and Peters played the best ball for the losers while Lake and Roe starred for the winners.

CROYDON GAINS VICTORY OVER THE OLNEY ACES

CROYDON, Oct. 25.—Functioning with machine-like precision, the Croydon football eleven ground out a 7-0 victory over the Olney Aces Sunday afternoon while 3,000 excited spectators roared for their respective favorites. The victory upholds the Croydon pace and leaves the team in an undefeated status. The fray was without a doubt the most brilliant and the fastest played at Eddington field this year.

Dean, new Croydon backfield acquisition, captured the limelight and was handed the banner of stardom for the day. This honor even goes above two former Mühlenberg College backfield men, Coll and Holland, who played a smart game for the visitors.

Hughes and Kervick were used for the line plunges and even though the defense offered sturdy resistance, made a number of long and sensational gains. Bains, Kutzer, Conn, Trindle and Polk offered sterling resistance on defense plays while here again Dean was credited with breaking up the tricky plays of the Olney Aces.

Holland played the stellar role for Olney while Coll and Damiani also came in for their share of the routing. The Aces presented the best football game of the season to Croydon and the teams were well matched.

"Legs" Robinson who played a fast game at left end for the homesters was taken out in the last quarter with an injured shoulder and leg. Just how serious the injuries are have not as yet been determined.

Even though Croydon was evenly matched in Sunday's game with the Olney Aces, they will meet a much stronger team next Sunday when the sailors from the U. S. S. Indianapolis will be seen in action at Eddington.

Croydon, however will be stronger than ever since a local physician has granted Stet Crossley, star fullback, to return to the game. The sailors have been meeting much stronger teams than Croydon in the forefront of the season and the test will be a real one for the local squad. Their battle cry now is: "Beat the Navy!"

Hockeyists of Croydon Win Over Hulmeville

CROYDON, Oct. 25.—Croydon roller hockeyists decided the supremacy of the rink between here and Hulmeville last Friday when they defeated that team in a final series game by a score of 4 to 1. The game was the fourth in a series in which Croydon won two and Hulmeville one while the third game was a tie score.

Swift and accurate playing on the part of Ash Gardner and "Boyle" Phillips gave Croydon the edge on the visitors. Ash accounted for one of the markers while Phillips was credited with two. Wolfe, playing the goal position for the visitors, was lauded for his work while, Filer, Smith and English came in for their share of the routing. Robinson played a fast defensive game.

Korinsak made the goal for Hulmeville while M. Smith and Keen played stellar roles throughout the game. E. Smith and Bilger also played a fast game.

Croydon will meet the fast White Top Hockey team from the Philadelphia Arena rink at the home floor tomorrow evening.

STATE NEWS

ALLENTOWN—John A. Rapp, president of the Lehigh Valley Motor Club, and Henry L. Snyder, State Senator from Lehigh County, have been named ambassadors extraordinary to produce a triple-lane highway between Allentown and Philadelphia.

Their first task will be to enlist the aid of Bucks and Montgomery County officials and citizens. The present two-lane road, via Quakertown and Spring House, is declared both dangerous and inadequate, especially on account of the enormous bus and truck traffic.

The present course from Allentown to Quakertown is regarded as satisfactory but the road is too narrow. Shift of Quakertown a number of relocations would be necessary. The roadway is believed to be of sufficient width to allow construction of the desired three-lane highway.

A petition has been drawn up for signing by residents along the route and others interested in the proposed improvement, which, it is hoped, will extend eventually to Mauch Chunk. It is proposed also to appeal to the Governor, the Legislature, and the State Highway Department.

During his sojourn in Pennsylvania he held 19 treaties with the Indians, who always found a welcome at Pennsbury; he was honored and revered by them. Because of his just and equitable treatment of the Indians, they named him the "Great Onus."

His second visit was even shorter than his first, but tidings from England that a measure was pending before the House of Lords for bringing all the proprietary governments under the Crown, led him to return to England, and moreover his wife and daughter were anxious to get back to their native heath, and on November 3, 1701, he sailed away with his family, now increased to four by the addition of little John, by ship "Dolmachey," never to return again, much to his great disappointment. Soon after his arrival in London the project before the House of Lords was dropped.

After his return to England he was involved by the troublesome affairs in Pennsylvania, by reason of his son, William, Jr., whom he sent there as his representative, having disgraced him by vicious and notorious conduct, while at the same time his trusted agent in London, a Quaker named Ford, left to his executors false claims against him to a very large amount. To avoid extortion Penn suffered himself to be committed to the Fleet prison in 1708, where he remained for a long time. Penn doubtless raised the money to pay off this indebtedness and gain his release from prison, by placing a mortgage on the Province of Pennsylvania under date of October 7, 1708, for £6,600 to Henry Gouliney and his eight associates. Under the Laws of England, his eldest son and heir at law, William, Jr., joined with him in executing this mortgage.

In 1712 while making arrangements for transferring to the Crown, his rights in Pennsylvania for the sum of £12,000, he was stricken with paralysis which was followed later by other strokes, and although he lived six years longer he never regained his mental vigor, and passed away July 30, 1718, in the 74th year of his age, and as Bancroft says: "with his fame as wide as the world."

William Penn, Jr., his only living son by his first marriage, was sent to Pennsylvania by his father, hoping that a change of environment and the importance of a responsible duty would reform his habits. He came to Pennsylvania, leaving his wife and family in England, but was accompanied by Lieut. Gov. John Evans; they arrived February 2, 1704. His freedom in Pennsylvania without restraint, enabled him to lead a wild and profligate life, to the disgrace of James Logan and all other friends of his father. His conduct was such that it made it impossible for him to remain, and at the end of November, 1704, he returned to England, having been here about nine months. By this unfortunate visit he injured not only himself but his father as well. William Penn, in one of his letters to James Logan, says: "He is my greatest affliction for my soul's sake and my posterity's or family's sake." His profligate and extravagant habits both in America and England were a source of great expense to his father who could ill afford to pay his debts, and moreover it is quite evident that William Penn was not a successful financier.

It was Cervantes who first said "Comparisons are Odious," but by way of comparison: Admiral Penn would not tolerate the religious tendencies of his son William; he beat him and turned him from his home, and finally sent him to Paris to mingle with the gay life of that city, but his habits were formed and he came back to England the same sincere and determined man, but also as a polished gentleman. And this same William Penn, the Proprietary, sent his son, William, Jr., to America, partly to remove him from his gay life in London, but while in America he disgraced his father, and came back to his profligate life in England.

It is a fact worthy of note that none of William Penn's sons became Friends, but those who survived him drifted back to the established church, and as will be seen later, the family name of Penn became extinct.

The Will of William Penn

By the last will and testament of William Penn, bearing date May 27, 1712, it is shown that he had lost entire confidence in his son, William, Jr., as he did not bequeath to him any interest in the proprietary rights of his American Colony, in fact by the following clause of his will, he practically disinherited him: "My eldest son being well provided for by a settlement of his mother's and my father's estate I give and devise the rest of my estate in manner following."

Brief of Title of Pennsbury Manor

There is no time at my disposal for entering into a chain of title of Pennsbury Manor, but will briefly say that it was located and laid out in 1682, during the first visit of William Penn. The tract originally contained 8,431 acres and was later included within the bounds of Falls Township, which was not erected into a township until ten years later in 1692. Its area was reduced by grants made by William Penn until but 300 acres remained.

In 1707 the Mansion House was rented to Col. Quarry merely to have it occupied. Many Indian treaties were held under its hospitable roof by William Penn, and on May 9, 1735, the last Indian treaty was held there by Thomas Penn, it was a continuation of the Walking Purchase treaty begun at Durham in 1734, and concluded at Philadelphia August 25, 1735.

For an exemplification deed on record at Philadelphia it appears that the heirs of William Penn executed a power of attorney to Charles Thomas and John Hurst to make sales and execute deeds for Pennsbury Manor. It further appears that Richard Penn on June 27, 1775, bought the remaining 300 acres with the view of making it his future home, but owing to the war, which was raging at that time, the American people did not feel kindly toward him, and he abandoned his project, and on June 20, 1792, conveyed the 300 acres, for the consideration of $2,500 to William Bell (Deed Book No. 27, page 400, &c.). William Bell on May 3, 1803, conveyed the same 300 acres to Robert Crozier (Deed Book No. 33, page 30, &c.). Robert Crozier divided the tract, selling 100 acres on June 23, 1803, to Jacob Van Hart (Deed Book No. 33, page 134, &c.). Robert Crozier died intestate seized of the remaining 200 acres, leaving a widow, Rosamond, and two sons, Robert and Samuel, to survive, to whom under the Laws of Pennsylvania the property descended. Subsequently, on April 1, 1812, Jacob Van Hart and wife reconveyed to Robert and Samuel Crozier the 100 acres, whereby they became seized of the entire 300 acres conveyed to their father by William Bell.

From the Crozier family it passed successively to Hector C. Watson, Esquire Howell, George Warner, Jr., Esquire Y. Warner, the DeFrain Sand Company and the Van Seiver Corporation, which was taken over by the Warner Company, which company has today very generously, by its president, Charles Warner, delivered a deed to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for 9.8 acres, the tract on which we are now assembled. Let us hope that through the liberality of our executive and legislators, this sacred and historic spot may be restored as near as can be to its primitive condition and thus honor the memory of his authority as governor, and directed Governor Benjamin Fletcher of New York to assume the administration of Pennsylvania. Penn had powerful friends who interceded in his behalf, through who he secured a hearing at court, and was honorably discharged in November 1693, and in August 1694, his government was restored to him. On September 3, 1699, he set sail from Cowes by ship "Canterbury" for his second trip to America, taking with him his wife, Hannah, and his daughter Letitia, then 21 years of age; James Logan, then a young man of 24, having been engaged as Penn's secretary, came over with them; he served as secretary of the province for many years. They landed at Philadelphia December 3, 1699. Penn was warmly received and found his colony in a prosperous condition.

PENN AND HIS HOME

Before settling at Pennsbury, they lived first at the home of Edward Shippen, on North Second Street, where they remained a month, then took residence with Samuel Carpenter, in the famous house called "Slate Roof House," on Second Street, south of Chestnut, and there in that house on January 29, 1700, their son John, thereafter called "The American," was born. He was the only child of William Penn born on this side of the Atlantic.

At Pennsbury they lived in great style, employing many servants, and judging by the large quantities of provisions bought, such as flour by the ton, molasses by the hoghead and other supplies in like proportion, suggests that they kept open house and dispensed a liberal hospitality. In addition to their home brew (for among other buildings there was a brew house), his cellar was well stocked with beer, cider, sherry, madeira, Canary, claret and rum. He was an enemy to tobacco, and his workmen and others on seeing his tobacco quickly hid their pipes and tobacco.

The Manor House is described as being large and commodious, 60 feet long by 30 feet wide, with wide porches both front and rear, two stories high, built of bricks probably burnt on the premises; on the roof there was a leaden lined water tank or reservoir. This in after years leaked so badly that it is said to have been the cause of injuring the house so badly that it was torn down. The house stood on an elevation 15 feet above tide, and 150 feet from the Delaware, with terraces leading down to the river, and a board walk between two rows of poplar trees; vistas and paths were cut through the trees in different directions. He was fond of agriculture and gave special attention to his gardens and orchards.

During his sojourn in Pennsylvania he held 19 treaties with the Indians, who always found a welcome at Pennsbury; he was honored and revered by them. Because of his just and equitable treatment of the Indians, they named him the "Great Onus."

His second visit was even shorter than his first, but tidings from England that a measure was pending before the House of Lords for bringing all the proprietary governments under the Crown, led him to return to England, and moreover his wife and daughter were anxious to get back to their native heath, and on November 3, 1701, he sailed away with his family, now increased to four by the addition of little John, by ship "Dolmachey," never to return again, much to his great disappointment.
